My main objection is that restitution in the form of vouchers from a company (Lumber Liquidators) that knowingly misled their customers is ludicrous. From their perspective it makes good business sense to offer $14 million in vouchers. Their real product cost would more likely be around $4 to $6 million. And it doesn't stop there. It basically forces the Class Member to do future business with them to redeem the awarded vouchers. Slick. Great deal for Lumber Liquidators.

My second objection is determination of fees to be awarded to Plaintiffs' Council. $9.3 million is the lion's share of cash compensation representing 66%. Maybe representing council would like to take 25% (benchmark fee) in cash and the remainder in vouchers. Lol

I will not be coming to SF to attend the hearing, adding to my loss. I spent 24 years there so I don't need to see it.

I have $14,000 invested in a floor that can't be repaired. Removal cost for wood and adhesive from the slab is estimated at $4,000.

Somewhat respectfully
